SUMMARY

This scientific article investigates the convergence between regulatory compliance, sports governance, and the comprehensive protection of minors in the context of international athlete transfers. The research analyzes the regulations of the international federation and the jurisprudence of the Court of Arbitration for Sport to demonstrate the contemporary legal challenges faced by training associations. The study highlights that structuring governance mechanisms is the main tool for mitigating contractual risks and safeguarding the fundamental rights of young people against the interests of European clubs. The research concludes that risk management and immigration compliance are indispensable elements for sustainability and ethics in the globalized football market.
